ONLINE RETAIL BOOM BOOSTS DEMAND FOR LOGISTICS SPACE

By CATHERINE TALAVERA

The Philippine e-commerce industry has been growing in recent years. But with the COVID-19 pandemic, growth has accelerated as consumers are now turning to the digital marketplace to buy the things they need.

As e-commerce grows, so will the logistics market, experts said.

In its report The Evolution of Philippine Logistics: A Case for Better Quality Logistics, property consultancy firm Jones Lang Lasalle (JLL) Philippines said the logistics sector remains resilient even with COVID-19.

“Despite the presence of headwinds posed by the pandemic such as the holding of end-user demand, the slowing down of delivery, and the disruptions in the global supply chain, the Philippine logistics sector shows signs of resiliency,” JLL Philippines said in the report.

Opportunities from the growing cold storage needs and the expanding e-commerce landscape are indeed boosting demand for logistics space.

JLL Philippines forecasts a 56-percent growth in demand by the end of the year. This is seen to grow by 118 percent by 2030.

“The outlook requires that a sustained improvement in e-commerce platform should take place along with the growing trade balance with other countries and favorable manufacturing sector,” said Janlo de los Reyes, head of research and consultancy at JLL Philippines.

JLL describes the logistics sector as an intriguing asset class in the country given its resiliency amid the pandemic.

SUPPLY

Thus, logistics space developers and operators should adapt with the evolving demand and build modern facilities to achieve the projections, De los Reyes added.

As of the first quarter of the year, existing logistics stock in the Philippines stood at 1.7 million sqm. Dry storage make up 66 percent of the existing supply, while cold storage and cold and dry storage contribute 21 percent and 12 percent, respectively.

In terms of new supply, about 424,000 sqm is set for completion by next year, most of which are in the Central Luzon and CALABARZON areas, which are the key gateways to the North and South of Metro Manila.

“These regions remain as attractive industrial and logistics corridors,” JLL said, adding that this is further supported by the ongoing and upcoming infrastructure projects that are expected to improve connectivity in the country.

BETTER FACILITIES

JLL Philippines director for industrial and logistics Tom Over said clients are demanding better-quality facilities such as high-specification warehouses that utilize technology and digital tools.

“The logistics sector is currently seen as the evolving asset class in the Philippines, with a number of established developers looking to increase their exposure in the sector,” he added.

FACING THE 'NEW NORMAL' IN A FUTURE-READY HOME AT THE RACHA MANSIONS

By HANNAH MALLORCA

The pandemic has completely changed the spectrum of our everyday lives. Activities such as meeting friends or loved ones, exercising during our free time, and going to the office have moved into the corners of our own homes.

With this, Filipinos are recognizing the importance of planning for the future. Many customers are looking for homes that are suitable for work-from-home (WFH) setups and a post-pandemic future.

According to Cathay Land president Jeffrey Ng, one of his objectives in building a future-ready home is how it's prepared to accommodate the requirements of the "new normal" and a post-COVID-19 society.

"We're used to living in a studio or one- to three-bedroom units in Metro Manila, but the prices are at an all-time high. But here, you can get a three- or four-bedroom house and lot package that's much more affordable, which makes much more sense in a financial aspect," Ng shares. "And with
